Why do we drill?

- We want to open up a new passage. We mine for resources inside the earth.

Why do we want new passages?

- It makes travel faster

Why do we want travel to be faster?

- It saves us time. To get things easily.

Why do we want to save time?

- To be efficient. To do other things.

Why should we do other things?

- Humans are curious animals.

Why are we curious?

- We hate not knowing about certain things.

After this, we decided to go with the theme of incompleteness. We started making a list of concepts that represent this theme:

1. A model that isn't fully built
2. A game without a conclusion
3. Cooking without the necessary ingredients
4. A comic that is not fully drawn
5. A story that doesn't have an ending.

6. Half a picture

7. A family where the dad is missing

8. An apartment with no furniture

9. Having one good quality but not the other, e.g. a genius who is shy

10. Berlin without the graffiti

11. A complete idea but you remove something from it

Once everyone had decided which of the options from the list they wanted to do, we created our respective blogs. Following is a summary of the blogs:

1. Binh: For option 6, he decided to block out different parts of pictures.

2. Rishan: For option 11, she removed a slice from a full pizza.

3. Ronal: For option 1, he built a website that never loads the content.

From here, we thought of how we wanted to combine these pieces. We went with the idea of trying to order/download a pizza from the dark web but since it is a shady activity, the fire wall (here, a literal representation) breaks down the pizza and we only receive half of our order. The entire image was edited in Canva (although poorly).

LOADING...

LOADING...